

High stakes at the ballot box

Dear Hospital Support Member:

The outcome of this election may determine your future workload, your family's access to health care, the hours you work, who you work for or whether you will have a job at all.

These are very high stakes, and as OPSEU hospital support workers, we need to think carefully about the choices before us.

Both leading parties are promising to stem the rate of increase in health spending, the Tories pulling the reins a little more tightly than the Liberals. The NDP is so far silent on specific spending targets. Leader Andrea Horwath told the London Free Press "it's pretty sad when the government points out how much money they're spending, as opposed to how much success they're having." As of press time, the NDP have not committed to a specific funding target.

Ontario's Auditor General, has issued a pre-election review of the government's cost assumptions for the next three years.

He describes the government's spending control targets as "optimistic and aggressive rather than cautious." This applies particularly to health care, where the rate of increase is expected to be much less than the pattern set over the last eight years.

The Liberals plan to increase health care spending by 3.6 per cent per year for at least the next three years. Their long term target is to reduce the rate of increase to 3 per cent per year. The Tories' plan calls for $6 billion in spending increases over the next four years – requiring them to reach 3 per cent almost immediately.

The difference between the two is about $1 billion over the next term of government.

Slowing spending on hospitals

The average annual rate of spending growth for hospitals has been 6 per cent over the past eight years, although it has been below 5 per cent in the last two.

The McGuinty government has budgeted for a growth rate of 3.3 per cent over the next three years, which will squeeze hospitals, many of which had only recently begun to balance their budgets.

While the Liberals say they can reduce costs by moving patients into the long term care and home care sectors, the slowing of the rate of increase is expected to be even greater in those sectors. Home care increases are planned to be cut by two-thirds. Funding increases to long term care are expected to be cut in half.

Health care or tax cuts?

While both the Tories and Liberals plan to dramatically stem the flow of money into health care, they have no intention of turning off the taps to private corporations. Both have committed to continued tax cuts.

This is despite the lack of evidence to suggest there is any connection between the rate of corporate investment and the taxes they pay.

Don Drummond, the architect of Martin-era Federal corporate tax cuts, has admitted that these tax giveaways have had no real economic impact. In fact, the rate of business investment in Canada has declined over the last decade despite cuts to corporate taxes.

According to the Federal government, every dollar spent on corporate tax cuts generates 30 cents in economic growth. Every dollar spent on public services generates an economic output of $1.40 for every dollar invested. Promising to roll back recent corporate tax cuts, the latest NDP radio ads say they will tie corporate tax cuts to job creation.

Attacking your wages, privatizing your work

Tim Hudak is clear in his Changebook that he intends to make workers compete for jobs – jobs that they already have.

This is despite a lack of evidence to suggest competitive bidding in health care has saved money or improved quality. In fact, most studies suggest the opposite.

Hudak's platform says that support services "like food preparation and laundry" are prime examples of where such competitions should take place, there is no question that clinical services would also be vulnerable. These competitions will likely lead to greater privatization of support services in hospitals.

It's clear what the goal is: Changebook claims the Tories will "bring public sector paycheques in line with private sector standards." He has even suggested that unions should be part of the competition, pitting your wages against those of non-union private sector workers.

Interfering with the arbitration process

If that isn't enough, the Tories intend to challenge the independence of arbitrators, claiming recent awards have been "excessive" even though most don't even cover the present rate of inflation.

"We will require arbitrators to respect the ability of taxpayers to pay and take into account local circumstances," the Tory platform says.

No planning

The Local Health Integration Networks have not worked well. The NDP promises to replace them. The Tories plan to cut them without any replacement, which raises the question of how public consultation will take place, who will do local planning, or how decisions will be made. Do we want a health system entirely run from Toronto?

In addition to tightening the screws on health care, the Hudak platform includes a promise to gag unions from openly engaging in the electoral process – something he doesn't intend to balance with similar rules in the corporate sector.

How you vote October 6, 2011 will make a difference. Many ridings are won or lost by very small margins. Your future may depend on it.

What you can do

1. Talk to others. Face-to-face contact is the most effective means of communications. That means bringing these issues to your family members, to your colleagues and friends.
2. OPSEU's hospital support sector is presently working on a video to highlight the work we do and to draw attention to its importance. Watch for it and share it on Facebook and other social media.
3. Make sure others in your workplace have received a copy of this leaflet. Ask them if they have read it?
4. Don't be afraid to speak up when you hear others trashing public sector work, including your own. Post comments to on-line stories in the media and write letters to the editor.
5. Attend all-candidates debates in your home constituency. Use our sample questions or make up your own.
6. Choose the candidate with the best health care platform and support them by taking a sign, giving them money, or working on their campaign.
7. Watch the Health Care Divisional Council BLOG – Diablogue – for updates and more information during the election. There is already considerable information there regarding this election, including a review of statements made so far by the parties on health care. Subscribe and encourage others to do the same. To find the BLOG go to www.opseudialogue.wordpress.com.
8. Come to the Ontario Health Coalition rally September 13th at 12 Noon in front of Queen's Park. Join in the march down University Avenue in Toronto.
9. Don't forget to vote, and encourage others to do so too.

All Candidate Questions

The Liberal and Tory platforms both propose a dramatic slowing of the rate of growth in health care spending. The auditor has suggested that these funding targets are “optimistic and aggressive” and will likely result in cuts to services, particularly at our hospitals. Are you placing the health of Ontarians at risk?

Both Liberals and Tories are advocating further cuts to the corporate tax rate even though the Federal government estimates a 30 cent return in economic growth, a fraction of the $1.40 in economic growth that would be generated by investing that money in public services. The NDP would tie tax cuts to job creation. Is your choice corporate tax cuts or health care?

In Changebook the Tories plan to bring public sector paycheques in line with private sector standards. One of the main reasons for the difference between private and public compensation is the more widespread application of pay equity in the public sector. Are the Tories planning to reduce the wages of women in the public sector as a way to bring wages in line with “private sector standards”?

There is much frustration across Ontario with the Local Health Integration Networks. How would you improve or replace them? And for the Tories, if you cut them without replacing them with anything, does that mean all health care planning and funding decisions are to be made in Toronto?

Tim Hudak plans on making public sector workers compete for their existing jobs. Should it be the role of government to make the workplace less secure and set an example for all employers on how to reduce the wages and standard of living for all Ontario workers?

Tim Hudak says he wants paycheque protection, allowing unionized workers to opt out from supporting causes they don't believe in. Given unions are democratic organizations much like government, does he also plan to allow all taxpaying citizens to “opt out” from government causes they disagree with?

The PC platform calls recent arbitration awards “excessive” even though most have been below the current inflation rate of 3.1 per cent (June 2011). What is your idea of “reasonable,” and would your government interfere with the independence of the arbitration process to arrive at such a figure? Should it be a goal of government to reduce the standard of living for its workers?

Cuts to the public sector in other countries have led to double-dip recession. Why would we want to do the same through a stepped up austerity program here in Ontario?

The auditor notes the inconsistency between the Liberal plan to move more hospital “alternate level of care” patients into long term care and home care while at same time dramatically reducing the flow of new funding into these sectors. How does this work?

In the event that health care workers face the transfer of their work to the private sector or to another public sector agency, will you maintain the right of workers to transfer with that work, taking with them their existing wage rates, seniority, vacation, benefits and union representation?

The Ontario Auditor General noted that the William Osler Hospital P3 deal cost almost $500 million more than had it been subject to traditional public procurement. Dalton McGuinty initially campaigned against P3s, now he is authorizing dozens of them. What is your view of this form of privatization?

Resources

Pick up a copy of “Challenging Austerity: Questions and answers for supporters of good jobs, quality public services and health unions in Ontario.” There are copies available at your regional office or contact rjanson@opseu.org to order some for your local.

OPSEU Dialogue: For updates on election issues:

www.opseudiablogue.wordpress.com

High stakes at the ballot box

This is the time to make a difference! Health Care Rally

Tuesday, September 13 / 12 Noon
Queen's Park

Non-partisan, this Ontario Health Coalition rally is intended to use the election period to pressure politicians of all stripes into making a commitment to protect our public health care system. It can only be effective if we all take the time to stand up and be counted.

www.opseu.org